EXPOSURE IN A CONNECTED WORLD

BY DENNIS HERMAN GENERAL MANAGER

DENNIS HERMAN

Most of you recall Y2K — the concern that our computer driven world would come crashing to the ground on the morning of January 1, 2000, due to hardware and software's inability to accommodate the first day of the new millennium in existing date fields. I was a system engineer at Highline Electric Association at the time, tasked with ascertaining Highline's exposure to, and designing remedies for, any shortfalls in our various systems.

It didn't take long to determine that our exposure was limited. While it was certainly possible that we would have some equipment that wouldn't handle the date correctly, there was no chance that the mishandling would lead to power outages or major disruptions to any of the various computer software and hardware systems utilized across the organization.

I wish I felt as confident today as I did then about Highline's resistance to the latest computerized threat — outside attack by cyber criminals. The first factor in my concern is due to the integration of computers into our lives over the last 20 years. While the concerns over Y2K were driven by what seemed to be the ubiquitous presence of computers, the computer presence then was a tiny fraction of what it is today. Every element of our industry is reliant to some degree on computer hardware and software.

The second factor causing my uneasiness is connectivity. Everything is interconnected, and this connectivity leads to incredible convenience and comfort. I'm not ready to give up the ability to turn my air conditioner on or off at home while I am on vacation. I also get a great deal of comfort knowing that I will get an alert on my phone if my smart doorbell detects motion at my backdoor when nobody is supposed to be home. This convenience and comfort is due to the ability to communicate with devices remotely over the internet. As much as I like the remote features, all my appreciation is dependent on an expectation that nobody else is controlling my thermostat or accessing my cameras.

The utility space is no different than any other industry; interconnected devices and systems have become increasingly common in recent years. This expansion has led to increased flexibility and ease of use with respect to the operation of Highline's distribution system and allows us to respond to outages and system disturbances faster than ever before. Unfortunately, the increased connectivity also comes with increased exposure to the threat posed by bad actors and a potential cyberattack.

Interestingly, as we look to ways to manage and limit our exposure to these threats, we fall back to one of our core values as a cooperative that has been around longer than any of the devices I've discussed: Cooperation Among Cooperatives. Highline belongs to large networks of cooperatives through our power supplier, Tri-State Generation and Transmission, and our national organization, the National Rural Electric Cooperative Association. Our IT personnel rely on collaboration within these networks to share resources and knowledge to aid in hardening our systems against potential attacks. I will never feel completely prepared for a potential cyberattack, but having experts on staff who have access to resources through our cooperative network gives me a level of comfort that would not be possible if we were standing alone.

Unclaimed Property

In 2020, Highline Electric retired the remainder of 1998 and 35.48% of 1999 capital credits for Tri-State Generation and Transmission, and also retired 73.72% of 2005 capital credits for HEA. If you see a name you recognize on the unclaimed property list, please have that individual (or a representative of that individual if they are deceased) call Elise at 970-854-2236 or email CapitalCredits@hea.coop.

Pesticide Safety

Please protect our employees

Our employees face serious health risks when they unknowingly enter a field that was sprayed or chemigated with any chemical. Just as you would not subject your family or employees to risk, we do not want to subject our employees to risk. Please consider the following:

- If you used any chemicals on a field, please notify Highline. You may call the office or you can place a flag at the entrance to the field. Please note the day when it is safe to enter the field and what chemical was used.
- Notification signs or flags are available free of charge at any Highline office.
- If calling during an outage, please notify Highline if the field was sprayed.
- The initial and long-term effects of absorbing chemicals in the body are extremely hazardous to one's health. Please don't subject our employees to these dangers.
